When other children were playing she would amuse herself by reading writings of the philosopher in the original Greek. Perhaps it was because she had led a very lonely life when she was a child, as her mother and father were often away at court, leaving her to the care of her governess and her schoolmasters at the gloomy family place called Bradsate.

at the groomy family piace called Brad-gate.

The big square house was built on the edge of a great forest surrounded by acres of uninhabited land. There were very few books and not any news-papers at the castle, and Lady Jane Grey had no playmates, as her govern-ess would not allow her to play with the servants' children and there were no others suitable for companionship within miles.

In England it is quite a fad to have teather comfortables. To make one, first take two pieces of sateen, silkoline or whatever material the comfortable is to be made of, have them the required size, lay one above the other and bind all around except one end. Next fill this covering with feathers until it is the required thickness. Bind the end. Put it in the quiliting frame and quilt in the ordinary manner, spreading the feathers evenly as you quilt. This makes the nicest kind of quilt, being both light and warm, and is especially nice for covering for the children.

THE OLD PROBLEM OF A

"It will be a long time before marriage settlements are made upon married women in this country." said a speaker at a recent club meeting. "But some arrangement for a definite income should be made for every married woman until husbands understand that the should be made for every married wom-an until husbands understand that the matter should be yoluntary. It has taken me a long time to discover that there are other women who dislike to isk for money as much as I do, but now know that that is one of the causes for what is called 'lack of domesticity tunate in having a certain income of my own, so that if my husband did not give me money I had something always to draw upon. I have had nothing to complain of personally in money musturers except that I am always placed in the attitude of a suppliant. If I were to ask for money I should always receive it. But I will never said and with a suppliant. If I were to ask for money I should always receive it. But I will never said and I will never said always receive it. "I did not answer that question. "I have women friends who are in business. One, for instance, is a broker. makes more money than her husband. So does another who is a writer It was to the latter that her husband said one day:

'How is it you wear handson clothes, you have expensive cut flowers around the house, and yet you never ask me for money?' 'No,' she answered, 'I earn it . .yself.'

There it was again: You never ask me for money.'

"Now, I believe that of all the various business of life there is none as dif-ficult as that of being a mother. It taxes every energy of brain and body. The wife in her home earns as much as the husband does in his profession outside. She is giving her best efforts for him. Why is the not entitled to half of the money he earns and why must she am not speaking now of the niggardly husbands, who ask their wives what they have done with the 'last quarter' that was given them. That is one kind of a husband that is to be found. I am talking of the so-called generous husband, whose wife must ask for what she receives, for what she real-ly earns. There is no more reason for this state of things than for the man who is employed by a business firm being obliged to ask each week for his salary, and it is as unjust.

A Diborcee's Letters to Her Ex-Husband

"The Real Love Letters of a Real Woman," published in The Times recently created much commert.

The Times has now secured a series of love letters even more interesting and readable than those. Beginning Monday, April 2, they will appear, one each day, until the entire series-comprising eighteen letters and a telegram-has been printed. The letters were written by a rather romantic married woman to her ex-husband, and they constitute, to say the least, a strong argument against a divorced woman marrying a second time while her first husband is still living.

They are shown in every imaginable shade for use with various costumes, but the pink and lavender borders are the prettiest and lavender borders are the prettiest for use with gray, brown, and other neutral tints, although gray, brown, yellow, dark and light green, rose, red, heavy purple and orange are shown. Very fancy black borders are also shown, but somehow these do not seem exactly in good taste. If they are meant for mourning, it would seem that a plainter border or neur white would

Embroideries for Children

Although laces and embroideries are used to a considerable extent in designing small fashions, it is far more practical to employ narrow braids and strappings of silk. Delicate embroideries are always smart, but they must be guarded with a care that deprives the tiny wearer of much comfort, and in this of the idea of being uncomfortable for the sake of fashion. So many other smart effects can be gained and worn really very smart, and the new silks in very wide widths are heavy enough Handkerchiefs made of embroidery to stand for much wear and tear. Embroidery Popular.

Fine French embroidery continues to be the most popular decoration for afternoon handkerchiefs. A preference is also shown for corner designs, instead of for those bordering the handkerchief all around. Little wheelbarrows loaded with flowers are among the most attractive new corner designs. Mono-
